

INDIAN BURIAL AND SACRED GROUNDS WATCH

HOME

MISSION

SITES

LEARN

Subjects

Sites in Need of Protection

Active cases

Fort Payne, Alabama

Closed cases

See latest update at bottom of page.

Wall of Shame

The Issue

Please inform the webmaster of any broken links!

For information on Ft. Payne and to sign a petition, visit <http://www.petitiononline.com/NAFTPAIN/petition.html>. Located in Dekalb County, the mounds and the village sites that have occupied them, date back 1,000 years and are presumed older than Moundville.

Update: 2002 Feb

Dig unearths history
By Teri Baker
The Weekly Post
Published February 15, 2002

Russell Townsend with the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians said his federally-recognized tribe has been working with officials since the remains of a prehistoric site were discovered on the site last June.

*See Comments of Tom Maher
Page 5
His opinion of arrowhead hunters & that arrowheads
are everywhere*

... everything it was supposed to
... derally-recognized tribes in

Jacksonville State University
... and Archaic-era Indians and raighten an area known locally

... ame to Fort Payne to remove
... road will soon be built.

zation represents Cherokees in
... inia, Kentucky, Tennessee, North
... and state agencies in these

... e to be moved, they will be
... ry respectful on their part," he said.
... to be concerned about their
... e in June meeting with the
... d with their care and respect, the way ancestors and ...

Department of Transportation and ... they treated us."

According to Harry Holstein, director of the Archaeological Resource Laboratory with Jacksonville State University, as with all federal and state projects, this research in